

Clinical research team participates in valuable training event

On January 9 and 10, Massey hosted “Good Clinical Practice (GCP) and Clinical Trial Data Management,” a special training session for members of the clinical research team. The event was exceptionally attended, and feedback from all involved was excellent.

“I’m thrilled at our staff’s level of involvement,” said Catherine Brown, regulatory affairs and administrative manager in the Clinical Trials Office at VCU Massey Cancer Center. “In addition to covering a lot of regulatory and operational information critical to our clinical research efforts, the training provided an opportunity for staff to collaborate with people outside of their typical work groups.”

The training was presented by Nikki Christison from Barnett International, who provides educational services to leading researchers at pharmaceutical, biotech and academic organizations on behalf of the Cambridge Health Institute. Christison was a dynamic and informative presenter who was well-versed on the many technical details involved in clinical cancer research.

This educational event was part of an ongoing effort by the Clinical Trials Office to provide staff with valuable training opportunities that will enhance the quality of clinical research at Massey. Additional training opportunities will be emailed to staff as they become available.
