Destination Fishing 101?

This is the time of year where most fishing in the Northern Hemisphere is prime. The snow pack is almost done melting in high elevations in the Rockies and weather patterns are more stable for many salt water venues. It's time to plan that annual trip to your destination river, lake or ocean fishing Mecca.

Why not higher a local guide to help you get ready for that dream trip? Most experienced guides have fished many of these distant waters or know clients who have and would be willing to share what they know to help you prep for your expedition.

We see more and more customers coming to us before their big trip say to the Rockies to trout fishing. They want to get better acquainted with their gear and do an inventory of gadgets so when they arrive to their destination they know where everything is stored. Maybe they need some casting tune-up tips, a knot tying session or maybe practice mending techniques to help get ready for selective wild fish on Western waters. Many salt water venues present a challenge for novice casters that will be dealing with excessive winds and wave action.

Believe it or not we here at River Through Atlanta Guide Service can help you right here on the Chattahoochee River! To get ready for wild trout trying booking a half or full day float trip in an authentic McKenzie drift boat targeting wild stream-bred Chattahoochee brown trout which are NOT easy to come by and will put your angling skills to the challenge. I myself have been humbled in New Zealand waters but I have been able to pass along trials & triumphs to clients traveling to the Southern Hemisphere. If you really want to prep for salt water try double-hauling large deceivers for double digit striped bass on the Lower River and practice taming large fish on your reel drag system. Better yet try site fishing with a guide for 20lbs carp cruising the mud flats with your guide poling from the platform and barks the location of the target to simulate your redfish or bonefish situations. Don't waste your precious time learning techniques on your vacation let us help speed up that learning curve before you go.
