

Jason Charles is a part of the Temple Sinai family and a rising senior at Emory University. For years, he has helped to make a difference in our community through fundraising and volunteering with organizations such as the Make A Wish Foundation, Sunrise Day Camp and Habitat for Humanity.

At Emory, Jason serves as the Fundraising Coordinator for an incredible national non-profit called Camp Kesem.

Camp Kesem is a week-long sleep away camp that is completely run and funded by college students. All the campers have a parent who has been affected by cancer and for this single, amazing week, they can let go of their burdens and responsibilities and just be kids.

There is currently a significant wait-list of kids who we would love to send to camp this year. "Kesem" means "magic" in Hebrew. So please join us in bringing a little bit of magic to these families in their time of need. Thank you! You can donate using the link in the Week Ahead you are currently reading.
