Expect the Unexpected

Being open to everyday miracles can open many new doors in your job search, and in your life!

Most people do not live each day expecting great things to happen. In fact, if you tune into the news these days, you can easily become overwhelmed by the violence and negativity.

Imagine instead if you woke up today believing that a miracle was inevitable! What if you expected great things to happen for you and everyone you touched? How would your day have been different?

What thoughts are you allowing to live in your head? Do they sound something like, “No one will hire me.” Or, “The economy stinks.” Or, “I’m too old.”?

What would happen if you trained your thoughts to be more empowering? Thoughts like, “I can do whatever I set my mind to,” or “Anything is possible,” or “I am an asset to my next employer.”

Being open to what’s possible, rather than constantly defaulting to what’s not possible, can alter your world forever.

I challenge you to rediscover your childlike curiosity, take up a passion you have long forgotten, take a risk, and expect the unexpected.

Life is such a precious gift, and tomorrow is not guaranteed.
