

This is the second year that IPFW students are eligible to apply for the Junior Fellows Program at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Each year, the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace holds a rigorous national competition to select approximately 10 to 12 graduating seniors to serve as research assistants on Carnegie Endowment projects. They are matched with senior associates—academics, former government officials, lawyers, and journalists from around the world—to work on a variety of issues related to international affairs. Junior Fellows have the opportunity to conduct research for books, participate in meetings with high-level officials, contribute to congressional testimony and organize briefings attended by scholars, journalists, and government officials.

Junior Fellows have the opportunity to work at the Endowment in Washington, D.C., for the period of one year and provide research assistance to scholars working on Carnegie Endowment's projects. This year the junior fellow positions are available in the following areas:

- Democracy
- Nuclear Policy
- Energy and Climate
- Middle East Studies – Native or near-native Arabic language skills essential.
- South Asian Studies – Strong background in international relations, strategy and military issues, comparative politics, and/or international political economy is essential. Quantitative data manipulation skills essential (fluency in R, SPSS, or Stata a plus). Note: foreign language skills not required.
- Southeast Asian Studies – Background in politics and economics of the region and knowledge of quantitative techniques a plus.
- China Studies (Asia Program) – Mandarin Chinese reading skills a huge plus.
- Japan Studies (Asia Program) – Japanese language skills required.
- Southeast Asian Studies (Asia Program) – Background in politics and economics of the region and knowledge of quantitative techniques a plus.
- Economics (Asia Program) – Mandarin Chinese reading skills a huge plus.
- Russian/Eurasian Studies – Excellent Russian language skills required.

IPFW will nominate up to two outstanding candidates to the national competition. Students who wish to be considered for this program are chosen via an internal competition and then the applications of our nominees are forwarded to the Carnegie Endowment.

The Carnegie Endowment does not accept direct student applications for this award.

Junior Fellows spend one year (beginning August 1) at the Carnegie Endowment in Washington, D.C. Positions are full time and include a salary ($37,000/year) and benefits package.

To apply for the IPFW internal competition, students must first register with and pick up application materials from Ann Livschiz, associate professor in the Department of History (Liberal Arts, Room 275). Those interested in applying should contact Livschiz (livschia@ipfw.edu) as soon as possible.

The deadline for submission of all materials for the internal competition is Friday, December 6, 2013, at 5 p.m. Complete application packets must be delivered to the History Department office (Liberal Arts, Room 209).

Complete details about the Carnegie Junior Fellows program are available at carnegieendowment.org/about/index.cfm?fa=jrFellows

This is the only the second year IPFW students are eligible to apply for this fellowship! Should you have questions or need additional information about this exciting opportunity, please do not hesitate to contact Dr. Ann Livschiz via email at livschia@ipfw.edu.

IPFW faculty who know of particularly promising students who would be interested in this program (and who are strong enough academically to be viable contenders for this program) should talk to these students and encourage them to apply for the internal competition.

Ann Livschiz, Ph.D.
Associate Professor
Department of History